PARKER'S ARREST
IN WENDEL CASEState Troopers Maintain All-Night Vigil Outside
His Home

MAY INDICT OTHERS

Five or Six More Likely To Become Involved
In the Case

MOUNT HOLLY, N. J., Apr. 25.—(INS)—In spite of an eight-state alarm for his capture, Ellis Parker, Jr., today continued to elude state troopers and detectives who sought to arrest him on a warrant from Brooklyn charging participation in the kidnaping and torture of Paul H. Wendel.

A score of state troopers maintained an all-night vigil outside young Parker's home here, the home of his father, Burlington County chief-of-detectives; and the homes of friends and relatives, but no trace of the youth was found.

The eight-state alarm was sent out by State Police headquarters in Trenton, acting under orders of Col. H. Norman Schwarzkopf, after several police officials expressed the belief the son of the famous country-sleuth had fled the state to avoid immediate capture.

In Brooklyn, District Attorney William F. X. Googhan declared that five or six more persons, in addition to the five already under indictment, face indictments for the kidnaping and torture of Wendel.

"Some of these will include public officials of New Jersey," he predicted. "The indictments will start to flow again next week. As to the question whether these will include men holding elective offices, I must answer I do not know, but I do not believe so."

Young Parker was described by Googhan as the "man behind the gang which carried out the kidnaping of Wendel and forced the ex-attorney to make several false confessions designed to save Bruno Richard Hauptmann from the electric chair."

GOVERNOR NOT LIKELY TO BE ABLE TO BOSS HOUSELack of Harmony Was Indicated at Recent Conference

IS LOSING POPULARITY

HARRISBURG, Apr. 25.—Governor Earle will not be able to boss the House of Representatives at the coming session of the Legislature as he did at the recent regular session.

This was indicated when the two Democratic House members of the so-called "harmony" committee of legislative leaders refused to take the Governor's orders at the committee's initial meeting and joined with their Republican colleagues in demanding that Earle take the lead in outlining a legislative program for their consideration.

The Governor, State Chairman Lawrence and their handymen forced the House last Spring to swallow all of the bitter doses prepared for it by the Administration bosses, although even then, with the Governor at the height of his prestige, some of the more highly controversial measures had only seven or eight votes to spare in the House.

Since then the Governor's standing in the State has waned, even among Democrats. To begin with, he is well along in the second year of his term, and no Governor ever is as strong in his second year as he was in his first.

Secondly, the Governor since that time has gone before the people twice and has twice been soundly defeated—first in his proposal to revise the Constitution, in which proposal he was beaten by a majority of 250,000, and again in November when the voters turned down his effort to seat a New Deal Judge on the Superior Court Bench by a vote of 234,000.

But the greatest difficulty the Governor will have at this time is to control the Democrats who are coming up for re-election. Democratic House members were forced at the regular session to vote heavy loads of new taxes on their constituents and this is coming home to haunt them now. Many of them are facing defeat largely because of the Governor's insistence that they vote for his unpopular program, and they realize that if they give their "o. k." to the levying of still more taxes of a burdening nature they will lose whatever slim chance they now have of coming back to Harrisburg next year.

Furthermore, the Governor has handed out nearly all the patronage at his disposal. Few of the old line Democrats feel they have got what was coming to them. Most of the Democratic legislators feel they have been short-changed in favor of mugwump Republicans. Privately they are even more sharply critical of the Governor than their Republican colleagues, who expected nothing and were not disappointed.

So, at the outset of the special session the Governor finds himself bankrupt of patronage promises, repudiated twice at the polls by a quarter million majority and faced with a tax-conscious public and a Legislature rebellious against his insistence on any measures that will prove unpopular back home. In his extremity he has hedged and dodged and tried to avoid the responsibility of outlining a program for discussion. So, while he was boondoggling in Washington and being turned down by his erstwhile pal, Harry Hopkins, in his demands for aid in the pumping out of flooded mines, his two members of the legislative harmony committee refused to be forced into the false position he demanded of them and served notice that the responsibility for the special session call must rest with him.

Women over the State are up in arms against further burdens of taxes which even now are eating heavily into their household budgets, and their opposition will be registered strongly to any further tax increase touching living expenses at the special session.

Mrs. Charles F. Etter, of Harrisburg, sent out the following bulletin the past week in her capacity as Chairman of the Statewide Legislative Committee of the Pennsylvania Council of Republican Women to all Council county presidents and members of the local legislative committees:

"At the conference called by Governor Earle to discuss the legislative problem it was apparent that the Governor desired to dodge responsibility

ROMAN HOLIDAY

(New York American, April 10, 1936)

"Jim" Farley—former member of the Boxing Commission of New York, entrusted with the classification and rating of pugilists, arrangement of their matches and the distribution of the stakes or "gate;" later, Chairman of this Commission and High Cockerum of the—ALWAYS—shady industry of PRIZE FIGHTING.

Now, Chairman of the Democratic State Committee of New York; also Chairman of the National Democratic Committee, and for the last three years, and still, TO THE MORTIFICATION OF EVERY RIGHT-THINKING AMERICAN, Postmaster General of the United States and political adviser of a PRESIDENT!

As National Democratic Chairman and Presidential adviser, Farley is STILL A MATCHMAKER.

Not matching "pugs," with cauliflower ears and flattened noses, it is true, but quite as evil and disreputable a form of match-making, i. e., matching public expenditure and public office with blocks of purchasable votes!

But why expect anything different from Farley, brought up on Tammany's schooling in "the cohesive power of public plunder"?

The cartoonist has portrayed the Tammany Hall origin and background of Farley in the wraithlike figures of "Boss" Tweed and Richard Croker, departed bosses of Tammany Hall, who smile approval as Farley, like one of the emperors of Rome's decadence, says "thumbs down" as he consigns Civil Service and the merit system to death at the hands of the swollen and debased figure of "Political Patronage."

And death it has proved, for never was known in our history such utter and callous debauchery of the national Civil Service as now prevails under Roosevelt and Farley, with hundreds of thousands of political workers and heelers appointed to useless and made offices which they hold at the public expense—a bought and paid for nucleus of electoral support for the re-election of the President, who, Farley has said, "WOULD NOT PERMIT HIMSELF TO BE DEFEATED."

Tammany Hall has been a synonym of corruption for more than a century.

Its district leaders have practiced a counterfeit humani-

ASKS CO-OPERATION IN CLEAN-UP WEEK HEREPeriod To Be Generally Observed Throughout the Entire State

A WEEK'S PROGRAM

The annual "Clean Up Week" generally observed throughout Pennsylvania starts Monday and the fullest co-operation of the residents of Bristol is requested by the officials of this borough.

Burgess Clifford L. Anderson, Fire Chief Clifford Hagerman and Dr. H. Doyle Webb, president of the Health Board, ask residents here to do everything possible to make "Clean Up Week" a success in Bristol.

In clearing properties of the winter's accumulation of rubbish, raking leaves and paper off lawns and filling up holes where water is likely to collect and stagnate, much can be done in the way of preventing disease, and removing hazards of fire.

The authorized ash and rubbish collector will make the regular scheduled collections in the six districts of Bristol and debris intended for his collection should be placed out in the usual manner and on the specified days.

The schedule for the entire state is as follows:

Monday, April 27—Highway Day. All sidewalks should be cleaned, gutters cleared, ditches opened and sewers flushed.

Tuesday, April 28—Forestry Day. Start on this day a continuous campaign of Forest Fire Prevention. Clean up and burn all accumulated brush, leaves and vines along fences, roadsides, railroads, and all buildings in or near forests. Burn the debris at a time when there is little or no breeze and the air is damp. Guard the fires until the last spark is extinguished.

Wednesday, April 29—Community Sanitation Day. All cess pools should be cleaned and lined. Out houses should be made fly-proof and pig-pens, chicken coops and farm yards should be cleaned. Holes in the ground where water accumulates after rain, should be filled to prevent their becoming breeding places for disease-bearing mosquitoes. Rain spouting should be mended, garbage cans cleaned and examined to be certain their tops fit tightly.

Thursday, April 30—Junk Day. Accumulated junk and trash in attics and cellars should be removed and the attics and cellars thoroughly cleaned. Discarded rubbish such as may be found in most cellars and attics provides, besides a breeding place for disease, a dangerous fire hazard.

The remaining days of the week may be set aside for any purpose decided upon. In a statement which was sent to all health officers, and public officials in Pennsylvania, the Secretary of Health said:

"Never before has the importance of the annual Spring Clean Up Week been as great from the stand-point of public health as it is today. This year, besides the usual accumulation of the winter's debris, we have tons of muck and filth deposited in our homes and on our properties by unusually severe floods. Much of this rubbish is a potential menace to public health.

"In many sections, flood waters damaged or swept away outhouses. Steps should be taken at once to rebuild out-houses along modern, sanitary lines. The Federal Works Progress Administration, in a project sponsored by the Department of Health, is prepared to supply labor and build modern out-houses for anyone who will pay the cost of materials which usually amounts to about $20."

CORNWELLS HEIGHTS

Mrs. Bertha States spent Sunday as guest of Mrs. Charles Milnor, Bristol. The Gay-tee Card Club met at the home of Miss Ida Minster, Tuesday evening. Pinochle was played, Mrs. John Smith winning first prize; Miss Hazel Peak, consolation.

JUNIORS GIVE A PLAY

213 at Spring Meeting; Plan
For Meeting of Southeastern
District in the Fall

(By Staff Correspondent)
CHALFONT, April 25.—Short addresses on a variety of subjects, a play by a group of juniors, coupled with musical numbers and reports of activities in all departments of club work, made up a meritorious program at the Spring Meeting of Bucks County Federation of Women's Clubs, in the St. James Lutheran Church yesterday.

Three state officers visited the Bucks County club women, on this occasion, the Chalfont Community Club acting in the capacity of hostess. The state officers who spoke, and who with past presidents of the county were guests at luncheon of the Chalfont club, were: Mrs. Alfred A. Crooks, vice-president of the Federation of Pennsylvania Women; Mrs. Gustav Ketterer, state chairman of Junior Club Women; Mrs. James F. Chalfont, state chairman of organization.

As the presiding officer of the day, Mrs. Alfred A. Daner, Yardley, president of the Bucks County Federation, called upon the officers for their semi-annual reports, and likewise introduced those participating in the morning and afternoon sessions.

Fifteen clubs were represented, the total attending being 213. Guests numbered 13, and juniors present were seven. This was shown by the report of the registrar, Mrs. Stuart Hartzel, secretary of the Chalfont club.

Group singing of the county song opened the morning session at 10.15 o'clock, with Mrs. William Deknatel, president of the hostess club, leading. Mrs. Hannah Johnson officiated in the salute to the flag; and the Rev. Donald Steinhauer, pastor of the Lutheran Church, offered the invocation. Responding to the welcome extended by Mrs. Nellie C. Royahn, Mrs. Daner expressed pleasure on the part of the women of the county in spending the day in Chalfont. Music by the Misses Grace Hartzel and Mildred M. Bruner, and Mrs. Deknatel, followed.

Included in the reports were those of: treasurer, Mrs. Melvin Freed; scholarship, Mrs. Calvin S. Boyer, Doylestown; and reports of the following departments—Juniors and sub-juniors, Mrs. Arthur F. Hagar; American Home, Mrs. Eldon Sowers; public welfare, Mrs. J. Howard Paxson; international relations, Mrs. Mark Bittle.

During the period for transaction of business Mrs. Arthur F. Hagar, Langhorne, told of the loss of three dogwood trees in the group planted at Washington Crossing Memorial Park by the Federation. A motion was passed to have these replaced. Mrs. Frank Lehman, Bristol, chairman of the finance committee, recounted the March executive committee meeting, and submitted a revised budget, which provided for larger apportionment for expenses of the president. It was suggested that instead of staging benefit affairs to raise more funds, that collections be more liberal.

Mrs. Crooks, who in addition to being vice president of the state Federation is also Southeastern district president, urged that clubs which sponsor contests for school students take a more active interest in the schools. "Show your real interest by sending a letter of thanks or verbally expressing your thanks to the participants and the schools." The annual state convention of 1937, and the Fall meeting of the Southeastern district of Pennsylvania which will take place at Perkasie in September, were mentioned by Mrs. Crooks.

The privilege of introducing Mrs. Ketterer was bestowed upon Mrs. Hagar, the county chairman of Juniors. The Juniors were likened by Mrs. Ketterer to life insurance policies by which the clubs and the federations can continue to grow. "We have about 10,000 Juniors in the State of Pennsylvania," she added. Informing of the responsibility on the part of the older group the speaker mentioned: "It is up to the Seniors to help guide the Juniors in preparation for service. The young people need the guiding hand of experience of the Seniors; and we must remember that the Seniors must be able to see things from the Juniors' standpoint." Telling of the method in which youth acts, Mrs. Ketterer spoke of the work for the blind. "The Juniors of Pennsylvania do more in respect to their blind fellowmen than those of any other state. In the coming year they plan to do more to help prevent blindness, and they have already purchased hundreds of pairs of eye-glasses. . . . May we all work together and produce that beautiful picture of service to mankind."

The third speaker of the morning

YOUTH WEEK

The youths of Edgely, Croydon and Bristol reign supreme today and this afternoon as they march through the principal streets of Bristol, vying for honors as to numbers and appearances as groups. They will be the center of interest and attention.

Youth Week has become a fixed occasion in the annals of this community and it is eagerly anticipated from year to year, by the boys and girls.

The Youth Week movement is a fine thing, but all of the interest and attention should not be centered on parades and athletic prowess. The movement should mean more than just that and the program should take on more of an educational nature and character building effort.

Of course the lighter side appeals more to youth which is quite natural, but those who shape the programs from year to year, as well as those who are interested should put forth more effort in making the week productive of some real substantial benefit. Of course it should not be a solemn occasion and one freighted with activities which would not be of interest to those in whose behalf it is sponsored.

The religious side could be stressed more than it has been. A more concerted effort could be made to have the youths as a whole attend religious service on Sunday.

The youth power of the community could be welded in such a manner that something worth while could be accomplished for those youths here, who are handicapped as to opportunity, either physical or otherwise.

Youth is a plastic age and as it is moulded so it will grow for more mature years. Why not endeavor to so fashion it that it will redound to the benefit of the populace as a whole.

Fly the flags today, take youth by the hand and tell him that he is the man of tomorrow; tell him the kind of a youth he should be if he is to be the kind of a man which the world needs.

Let us strive each year for a youth program which will be of a lasting and substantial benefit.

THE AGE OF ADVENTURE

The age of adventure is dead, say some. People read of the old days when boys would run away from home to fight Indians, or hunt buffaloes, or they would run away to go to sea. But now the frontier is all settled, and the boys don't seem much interested in seafaring, but they still feel the same inner longing for adventure.

Aviation supplies it to them more than anything else now. Immenseable boys are dreaming of great stunts in airplanes. This expanding field offers opportunities for some, but a great many boys are dreaming of sensational adventure, who are not fitted for any such stunts.

They dream so much of great exploits, that they are in danger of missing plain and simple opportunities within their reach.

Grace Moore says that what she objected to was having to sing while milking a cow. No one deigned to get the cow's attitude.

His opposition complains that London doesn't talk enough. The resemblance to Coolidge is becoming positively uncomfortable.

"THERE'S MURDER IN THE AIR"

by ROY CHANSLOR

CHAPTER XXII

"I say just suppose, for the moment, that was Johnson," Tyler went on. "Knowing the house, and realizing the chance he was taking, he would leave every possible avenue of escape for himself open. That would include this door from your room to Mrs. Gordon's, which he could easily unlock during the day. I'm assuming the key is ordinarily in her side of the door."

"That's right," said Doris. "Now," said Tyler, "the killer is about to shoot Helene, when he is surprised by Nat, and hears me on the balcony. He shoots Nat to avoid discovery, and knowing his escape by the balcony is cut off, takes a desperate chance and runs into Mrs. Gordon's room."

"Where, if it were Johnson, he'd know he'd run into her," said Doris. "True," said Tyler. "But remember, he is completely desperate. If necessary, he'd kill her. But the breaks are with him. She has heard the shot and has run into the hall. He peers out of her door, sees her enter your room with David, and then quietly joins them, as if he were coming from upstairs. The bell is ringing, and I send him to let Mr. Gordon in. How's that?"

"Yes," said Doris heavily, "but Johnson—no, I can't believe it!" "One little detail," Nat put in. "Is it reasonable to believe that if he knew there was a chance he'd run into Mrs. Gordon, he'd throw his gun under this bed before he went through that door?"

"Of course he wouldn't," said Tyler. "But if he had that gun on him, he'd darned well want to get rid of it. It would have been easy for Johnson to have thrown the gun there after he'd come back into the room, while we were all excited and concerned over you."

Nat looked skeptical, but a look from Tyler silenced further questions. Doris was looking at the door to Carletta's room thoughtfully. "It couldn't have been Johnson," she said. "But—I'm glad you've said what you did. Some one else could have done just that—and then escaped through the hallway while everyone was crowding into this room."

"That's possible," Tyler admitted. "Oh, thank God, you've freed my mind of that awful thought—about Carletta," she said. "How I hate myself for it! I should have known she couldn't. How can I ever make it up to her?"

Nat put out a hand and took one of hers. She looked at him gratefully. Then she turned and left the room.

Nat turned a puzzled glance toward Tyler. "Why did you make up that fantastic story about Johnson?" he asked wonderingly. "Nobody in his right mind would have taken all those chances. It was a miracle he wasn't caught."

"Not a miracle," said Tyler. "But certainly lucky. But remember this, whoever it was, couldn't very well expect us to come charging in just as he was getting ready to shoot."

Then he told Nat the rest of Gordon's story, as it had been told to him. Nat listened, absorbed.

"Well, that's that," he said. "That explains the gap in his past. And it must be Carletta who is behind all this. But it's incredible that any of this household could be in league with him. The man must have bribed one or more of those guards."

As Tyler came out of the house and started for the cottage to fetch Ruth for breakfast, he saw Carletta Gordon in the garden. He bade her good morning and started on for the cottage. But she came toward him.

"I must talk with you," she said in a low voice.

Quickly Tyler stole a look at her face. It was full of concern.

"It's—it's about Helene," she said. "You know I spent the night in her room. She—oh, Mr. Tyler, I'm afraid the shock has—has affected her mind!"

Tyler looked at her sharply. She seemed greatly distressed—and hesitant.

"It's—it's a pure delusion, of course," the woman went on. "But she seems obsessed with the idea that Doris— Oh, I don't know what to say!"

"Perhaps you'd better just tell me," said Tyler quietly.

She nodded and began to walk slowly through the garden, Tyler keeping pace.

"You see," she said, turning toward him as she walked. "I know what Helene's been through. I know that as soon as her mind clears, she'll feel differently; but now—well, she's terribly frightened—of Doris. During the night she kept—kept murmuring her name. And her voice was full of—horror—and dread."

She looked at Tyler appealingly. "I—I can't mention this to Paul," she said. "At any rate, not as long as—as it looks as if some one inside the house . . . Oh, you see the position this puts me in! Because I know how Doris idolizes her. She wouldn't harm a hair on her head!"

"You mean that Helene—thinks Doris—tried to kill her?" said Tyler quietly.

"Oh, I don't know what she thinks," said Carletta. "It's—too dreadful. Helene's—simply not herself. If Paul should hear her talking this way!"

"What do you think?" said Tyler. "I—I don't trust—" She paused, lowering her voice, "I don't trust—Johnson," she said, barely whispering the name. "Oh, I know I shouldn't say that. Paul is terribly fond of him. But who else—who else inside the house?"

"Perhaps—Gordon was able to get a man inside," he said, looking at her closely.

She stopped, stared at him. "You—you know about him?" she said.

Tyler nodded.

"Your husband told me the whole story," he said.

"But how could anyone get inside?" she asked tremulously.

"Some one may have helped him," Tyler said.

She nodded, then resumed walking.

Johnson knew all about those switches," she said. "He could have seen Doris go downstairs, slipped into her room, turned off her alarm. . . . Oh, it's too terrible to think!"

"And yet Helene is afraid—of Doris," said Tyler.

"Oh, it must be that she just doesn't understand," said Carletta. "She knows the shot came from those curtains—doesn't realize that Doris herself was not in her room at the time."

"But perhaps she was," said Tyler. "Do you know that she wasn't?"

"No, I don't know," said Carletta. "But I don't believe for one moment that Doris— No, she's telling the truth. Some one—some one is trying to throw suspicion on her. It's—it's monstrous."

Tyler nodded gravely.

"Monstrous—if true," he said.

"Mr. Tyler, I have utter faith in Doris," said Carletta. "I know she's innocent!"

"I'm glad you feel that way," he said gravely.

He looked at her troubled face. "What shall I do?" she asked.

"I should do nothing—for the present," he said.

There came a knock, suddenly, the sound of the violin. Abruptly Tyler excused himself, strode toward the cottage. The music stopped as he stepped into the house. The maid Olga, wide-eyed and frightened, appeared on the stairs.

low, and hurried to Ruth.

"You must get Helene out of that house, immediately," the girl said. "The danger is not past. Some one is afraid of her—of something she knows. Unless she's taken away—she'll be killed!"

Tyler hurried to Dr. Grace's room, where he found the physician about to descend to breakfast. He asked Dr. Grace to accompany him, and the two men went to Gordon's apartment. There Tyler told them of Ruth's warning.

"Dear God!" Gordon exclaimed. He began to pace up and down the floor.

"That settles it," said Dr. Grace. "I shall take her to a hospital this morning."

Gordon stopped and looked at the men helplessly. He threw out his hands.

"Of course," he said. "But where—" "I haven't yet phoned Karasc," said Tyler. "Perhaps he can recommend—"

"An excellent idea," said Dr. Grace.

"Yes, yes," said Gordon. Tyler went to the phone, called Baltimore, got Dr. Karasc on the wire. Omitting only Gordons story of his past, he recited the new developments in detail.

The psychiatrist was excited. "But certainly," he said, when Tyler had finished. "You must get the girl out of the house immediately. I know the symptoms. It's a frightful condition of shock. In addition to the—physical danger, there's a definite possibility that any further strain might permanently affect her mind."

"We wondered if you could recommend—" Tyler began.

"But yes," said Dr. Karasc. "I know the very place. It's a sanitarium in Westchester. Not far from where you are. It's run by a colleague of mine, Dr. Joel Peters. An excellent man for this case. If you wish, I'll phone him, make the arrangements. I suggest that you take the girl with you."

Tyler held the wire and told them what Dr. Karasc had said.

"A good suggestion," said Dr. Grace. "I know Peters—an able man. I should have thought of him myself. We'll take her there this morning. You agree, Paul?"

Gordon nodded.

"Thank you, Dr. Karasc," said Tyler. "If you'll phone at once, say 'This very moment,' said Dr. Karasc. "One more thing: I suggest that you tell no one exactly where you are taking the girl."

Tyler hung up, and repeated this suggestion to Dr. Grace and Gordon. "Personally I agree with Dr. Karasc," he added.

"All right," said Gordon. "I—I'll do as you gentlemen say."

Dr. Grace slipped an arm through Gordon's.

"Paul," he said, "you ought to have your breakfast."

Tyler returned to the cottage for Ruth, and told her the decision which had been reached. She nodded in agreement.

"The sooner she is out of this house—the better," she said, with a little shudder. "There's something—evil—about the place."

After breakfast Gordon announced that Dr. Grace was taking Helene to a hospital for a few days. Doris started up from the table.

"Name?" she cried.

Gordon looked at her in surprise. "But she needs attention, and there's an excellent doctor—" he began.

"We don't want any strange doctors!" the girl cried. "I'll take care of her. I won't leave her side for a moment. No harm can come to her."

Gordon took her hand. "We must do what is best for Helene, dear," he said, gently.

"Of course we must, Doris," said Carletta. "I'll go with Dr. Grace and see that she's comfortable."

"That won't be necessary, darling," said her husband.

"Let me go with her," said Doris quickly.

"There's no point in us all going," said Gordon. "Mr. Tyler and I—"

"Shall I go along?" asked David. "It's entirely unnecessary," said Gordon. "You've things to do in the city, Dave. I think you'd best attend to them."

David hesitated, then nodded agreement. Doris began to plead with Gordon to be allowed to go along.

He put his arm about her shoulder. "We'll take care of her," he said gently.

She looked up into his face. "Whatever you say, Dad."

He smiled then and drew her closer to him. "Dave's going into town," he said. "You stay and keep Ruth and Nat company."

Governor Not Likely To Be Able To Boss House

and to force the legislative leaders to tell him what should be done. This would have placed him in the position of being able to put blame for new taxes on the Legislature, to have discarded any part of the legislative program he did not like and to add any radical ideas of his own, on the basis that the recommendations did not go far enough. Thus the Governor would have received any credit to be derived and would have placed all adverse criticism on the Legislature.

"Even Democrats present saw the unfairness of this, and while both Republicans and Democrats were of the opinion that a so-called 'harmony' committee be appointed to consider what should be done, they insisted it was the Governor's duty as chief executive to make the initial recommendations as subject for the committee's discussions.

"The Governor, however, continues to put politics ahead of harmony. Notwithstanding the fact that Republican State Chairman M. Harvey Taylor promptly announced the appointment of Senators Owlett and Gelder and Representatives Turner and Blumberg as Republican members of the 'harmony' group, the Governor in his initial conference following this announcement called the Democratic members into consultation, but ignored the Republicans. We must expect a continuation of this political policy. The effort of the Earle administration apparently will be to try to discredit the Republicans and to make political capital for the Democrats during the special session.

"Broadly, the policy of the Republicans in the Legislature will be to take a most generous attitude toward flood and unemployment relief, but to try to hold appropriations within reason and to endeavor to prevent the levy of taxes beyond those absolutely necessary to raise needed funds."

RULLO CONFIDENT HE CAN WHIP CONQUEROR

In amateur boxing it is very seldom that a fighter knocked out in the first round requests a return bout with his opponent, feeling that he can whip that man. But that is the case with Johnny Rullo, Mason fighter. Rullo was knocked by Johnny Raccagno in Bristol over a month ago. Since then he is a greatly improved fighter and reached the semi-finals of the recent A. A. U. tournament in Philadelphia.

Rullo still feels confident that he can hand the Bristol youth a lacing, despite his early beating. So Ralph Mazone, his manager, has arranged with Patsy Moffo for a return match which will be fought in the Italian Mutual Aid ring, Monday night. Ten bouts will be held under the sanction of the Middle Atlantic District of the A. A. U.

Match-maker Moffo has also arranged for a meeting of Louis Burman, Mason, and Phil Quici, St. Ann's. In his last start, Quici knocked out his opponent in the third round. Burman has been seen in this section quite a few times and is a hard hitter who can certainly time his blows. But the Bristol fighter is in the pink of condition and is determined to add Burman to his list of victories.

Moffo is trying to match Harry Davis, colored boy, with Frank Donofrio, senior 175 pound A. A. U. champion. He is also securing a fight for Tally Sciarra who is on the come-back trail. Last night, word was received at the St. Ann's club-house that John Giordano is on the sick list and may not be able to meet Vince Delia, local south-paw. If Giordano does not appear, it is most likely that Tony Sourilla, Seymour, runner-up in the tournament, will fight Delia.

TWILIGHT LEAGUE COMPLETES ITS PLANS

The Bristol Twilight Baseball League last night completed plans for the opening game of the 1936 season which will be played on Leedom's field Monday night at 6:30 o'clock. In the first tilt, the Hibernians will meet Felix Tomlinson's Jefferson A. C. team. Dave Landreth, president of the league, will toss out the first ball. A meeting of the circuit was held in the office of D. Landreth Seed Company.

The schedule for the remainder of the week is as follows: Tuesday, American Legion and Excelsior, Bath Road at Tullytown; Wednesday, Odd Fellows and St. Ann's; Thursday, Edgely and Casey's; Friday, Bath Road and Hibernians. The Casey's who earlier in the season had withdrawn from the league have re-entered to defend the championship, they won last season.

Managers and directors present at the meeting were: Hibernians, John C. Boyle; St. Ann's, Raymond Pico; Tullytown, D. McSherry; Edgely, Walter Miller; Bath Road, Jack Ritter; Odd Fellows, Robert Sutton; Casey's, Paul Moore and Leonard Monaco; Excelsior, Oliver Ringgold and Raymond Dorsey; Jefferson, Felix Tomlinson; American Legion, Robert Hems.

A resolution was made and passed that the home teams must surrender the field for batting practice to the visiting club at 6:15 p. m. and all games must start promptly at 6:30. The schedule of the umpires and scorers was left in the hands of secretary, Thomas Jano.

CASEYS ARE TO MEET

Members of the Casey's baseball team will meet on the high school field at 1:30 p. m. Sunday afternoon.

tarianism which took the form of "relief" as elections approached, just as now in Washington under "Tammany Jim's" direction.

It is Tammany Hall's old stand-by.

What Democrat with a memory does not recall how a Tammany vote or a Tammany nominating speech or Tammany support in any form has handicapped a candidate in the national conventions of the Democratic Party?

There was stigma in the very name.

But Tammany Hall has been, until the present Administration in Washington, a local disorder, confined to the City of New York.

How do you, fellow countrymen, like to see it take on national proportions and spread its stain and corruption over every State in the Union?

THIS IS PRECISELY WHAT IS HAPPENING UNDER YOUR VERY EYES.

The formula is the same, the methods are identical, the ingredients of the new NATIONAL Tammany are the same as those of the local New York Tammany, viz., the corrupt use of public funds and the corrupt appointment of hangers-on and sycophants to public office in exchange for the votes which, it has been shown, this double-barreled corruption can buy.

Will Americans continue to submit to Farleyism, or will they stamp it out before its tentacles have spread over the face of the nation and made THE CAPITOL at Washington merely an ENLARGED TAMMANY HALL?

Chalfont Club Is Hostess To Bucks County Federation

was Mrs. Chalfont, the state chairman of organization. Necessity of familiarity with the by-laws of the club formed the basis for Mrs. Chalfont's remarks. "Are they permitting you to function as you want to function?" she queried. After enumerating the apportionment of the money used for state dues, the guest said, "It should mean much to you to give one cent a week to have the privilege of being associated with the greatest group of women in the world—an organization that has stood for every forward movement for woman-kind." The requisites of clubs were mentioned as being: Sociability, study, service. A wider membership of women in the various communities was advocated. "There are many women in your towns who need club contact."

Among the announcements at the close of the morning meeting were: For May 1st, Bucks County Public Health Association and Public Health Nurses, meeting at Doylestown Inn; May 11th, four p. m., dinner meeting at the Doylestown Country Club, to promote interest in public welfare and health, sponsored by Public Health Association of Philadelphia, April 30th, 2:30 p. m., at Strand Theatre, Doylestown, Roadside Beautification session.

Following luncheon at the local fire company station, the women convened for the afternoon meeting.

Two groups of violin selections by Mrs. Ernest Gamble, Langhorne, were eagerly listened to by the club women. The numbers were: Gypsy Airs (Sarasate); Scotch Lullaby (von Kunits); Souvenir Poetique (Fibich); Mazurka de Concert (Musin). Accompanied by Mrs. Edgar Frutchey, Langhorne. Mrs. Earl Tomb, Bristol, Bucks county chairman of Conservation and Gardens, presented the speaker of the afternoon, Mrs. Abram B. Ross, executive chairman of the Bowman's Hill State Wild Flower Preserve. Problems facing the committee in charge of the preserve were considered by Mrs. Ross, who mentioned that 112 organizations and individuals have contributed either funds or plantings for the preserve: with 2500 to 3000 wild flowers being set out there. "We have a gigantic task in attempting to plant 100 acres," she informed. The assemblage was told of the nature library, the flower catalogue, the bird and flower plates, in the office of the committee at the Thompson house in the park.

Rapt attention was given as Mrs. Ross told of the preparation and planting of the three trails in the preserve, one sponsored by the Bucks County Federation of Women's Clubs being named the Mary K. Parry Trail. Mrs. Ross expressed appreciation to the group for making this third nature trail possible. On it the flowers, shrubs and trees will be plainly marked.

A birds-eye view of conservation work in the United States was given by the speaker. She told of the exploiting of rivers by certain interests, resulting in loss of fish, loss of employment by many in some sections in the pearl button industry, etc. The draining of countless acres of marsh lands needed by migratory birds, was deplored, with the draining of vast acreage in the West resulting in dust storms. "The over-grazing in the West is also inviting disaster," added Mrs. Ross.

The climax number for the day was the staging of a short play, "They Criticize, and How!" by Langhorne Junior Sorosis. Participants were: Mrs. Charles Wildman, Misses Catherine Allison, Jane Buckman and Madeline Rumpf.

Mrs. William C. Ryan, Doylestown, courtesy chairman, on behalf of the Federation, thanked the Chalfont club for its hospitality, the program committee for its excellent numbers, and the state officers for helpful messages. Program committee included: Mrs. Paul Bennett, Langhorne; Mrs. Harvey J. Funk, Lumberville; Mrs. Reuben Kester, Newtown; Mrs. Nellie C. Royahn, Chalfont; Mrs. Earl Tomb, Bristol.

The Federation adjourned to meet in Doylestown in October for the Fall meeting.
